

Rayfelmun'27

DELEGATE HANDBOOK

THE ESSENTIAL GUIDE FOR DELEGATES

Welcome to RayfelMUN'27!

This delegate handbook is meticulously designed to guide you through the official rules of procedure, code of conduct, and essential committee dynamics. Whether you are a first-time participant or a seasoned diplomat, this manual will serve as your primary resource for a highly productive and diplomatic conference experience.

Rayfelmun'27
11-13 May 2027
Lüleburgaz/Kırklareli

Prepared strictly for the delegates by the
RayfelMUN'27 Academy
Team

rayfelmun.org
rayfelmun39@gmail.com

Rayfelmun'27

1- DRESS CODE

MUN is a formal academic conference, and delegates are expected to dress accordingly.

The purpose of the dress code is not to make delegates compete over their appearance. It is to maintain a professional environment and reflect the diplomatic nature of the simulation.

GENERAL EXPECTATIONS

Appropriate examples include:

- Suits or formal trousers with a formal shirt
- Blazers and formal trousers
- Formal dresses or skirts of appropriate length
- Formal shirts, blouses, sweaters, or jackets where permitted
- Formal shoes
- Other clothing specifically permitted by the conference

Dress should also remain appropriate during:

- Opening Ceremony
- Committee sessions
- General Assembly sessions
- Formal presentations
- Closing Ceremony
- Other official academic activities

During committee
Delegates should remain appropriately dressed throughout formal committee sessions. A delegate should not treat committee time as casual time simply because the debate has become informal.

Social events may have a different dress code if announced by the Secretariat.

Rayfelmun'27

2- LANGUAGE

As you are simulating an international diplomatic body, the language you use matters immensely.

English is the official language of the conference, and all speeches, working papers, and draft resolutions must be written and delivered in English.

More importantly, you must speak in the third person while in formal debate. Instead of saying "I believe we should fund this initiative," you should say "The delegation of France believes this initiative requires funding." It sounds a bit strange at first, but it is crucial because you are not speaking for yourself—you are speaking on behalf of a sovereign state. Slang, colloquialisms, and informal phrasing should be avoided while you have the floor.

3- COURTESY AND DECENCY

Debates in MUN can—and should—get passionate. You will find yourself disagreeing with other delegates, forming alliances, and trying to persuade the committee. However, that passion must never cross the line into disrespect. Courtesy is the foundation of diplomacy.

Always treat your fellow delegates, the dais (your Chairs), the Secretariat, and the venue staff with the utmost respect. Interrupting a speaker, using offensive language, or engaging in personal attacks will not be tolerated under any circumstances. If you disagree with a policy, attack the policy, not the person presenting it.

4- MISCELLANEOUS RULES

Punctuality is key. Arriving late to committee sessions disrupts the flow and can cause you to miss the Roll Call.

Furthermore, the use of electronic devices like phones or laptops during formal debate is strictly limited to MUN-related research and resolution drafting.

Scrolling through social media or messaging friends during committee is highly disrespectful to whoever is speaking. Finally, please respect the venue. Clean up after yourself, do not bring food into the committee room unless explicitly allowed, and remember that you are representing both your own school and the MUN community.

Rayfelmun'27

5-RULES OF PROCEDURE

The Rules of Procedure (RoP) might look like a dense, complicated legal document at first glance, but try to think of them as the operating system for the committee. With dozens of people in a room trying to speak, the RoP ensures that everyone gets a fair turn, that the debate stays on topic, and that ideas eventually turn into written solutions.

FLOW OF COMMITTEE

A typical MUN committee follows a logical progression over the course of the conference. It begins with the Roll Call to establish who is present. From there, the committee opens debate and sets the agenda. The majority of the conference will be spent alternating between formal speeches (the General Speaker's List) and informal debate (Moderated and Unmoderated Caucuses). Towards the end of the conference, the committee will transition into drafting paperwork, presenting resolutions, and finally, entering voting procedure.

ROLL CALL

At the very beginning of every session, the Chair will take Attendance. When your country's name is called, you must raise your placard and state either "Present" or "Present and Voting".

If you say "Present", you are allowed to abstain (vote neutral) on a final Draft Resolution.

If you say "Present and Voting", you are declaring that you will definitely vote either Yes or No on all substantive matters—you give up your right to abstain. Choose wisely!

THE GENERAL SPEAKER'S LIST (GSL):

This is the default mode of the committee

It is a continuous list of speakers who want to address the topic at a broad level. When the GSL is open, you can send a note to the Chair asking to be added. You can talk about your country's general stance or overarching solutions.

Rayfelmun'27

MODERATED CAUCUS:

When the committee wants to zoom in on a specific sub-topic (e.g., instead of talking broadly about "Climate Change," you want to talk specifically about "Funding for Renewable Energy"), a delegate will motion for a Moderated Caucus. You must specify the total time, the speaking time per delegate, and the topic. For example:

"Motion for a 10-minute Moderated Caucus, 1 minute speaking time, on the topic of border security." The Chair calls on delegates one by one to speak.

UNMODERATED CAUCUS:

This is the informal, highly active part of the conference. If a motion for an Unmoderated Caucus passes, delegates can freely stand up, walk around the room, form blocs, and negotiate directly with one another. This is where the actual writing of resolutions happens.

Points

While motions dictate what the committee is doing, "Points" are used for personal or procedural matters. You can raise your placard for a Point at any time, though you should avoid interrupting a speaker unless absolutely necessary.

- Point of Personal Privilege: Use this if you are experiencing physical discomfort that prevents you from participating. For example, if you cannot hear the speaker, or if the room is too hot. (This is the only point that can interrupt a speaker, but use it sparingly).
- Point of Order: Use this if you believe the Chair has made an error in the Rules of Procedure. The Chair will quickly correct the mistake or explain their ruling.
- Point of Parliamentary Inquiry: Use this if you have a question about the rules. For instance, "Honorable Chair, what is the required majority to pass this motion?"
- Point of Information: This is generally a question directed at a speaker who has yielded to questions.

YIELDS

When you are giving a speech on the General Speaker's List, you might have extra time left on the clock when you finish. You cannot simply walk away; you must "yield" your remaining time.

You have three options:

- Yield to the Chair: The safest and most common option. You give the time back to the Chair, and the committee moves on to the next speaker.
- Yield to another delegate: If you and another delegate are working closely together, you can yield your remaining time to them so they can continue your point. (They must accept the yield).
- Yield to questions: You open yourself up to answering questions from the committee for the remainder of your speaking time. This shows confidence but requires quick thinking!